Cookies

What is a cookie?

Cookies are text files containing small amounts of information which are downloaded to your device when you visit a website. Cookies are then sent back to the originating website on each subsequent visit, or to another website that recognizes that cookie. Cookies are useful because they allow a website to recognize a userâ€™s device. Cookies do lots of different jobs, like letting you navigate between pages efficiently, remembering your preferences, and generally improve the user experience.

This website uses cookies to enhance your site visit or provide services to you at your request. For our site optimization and improving the site to better serve your interests, this site uses anonymous performance cookies for analytics to analyze our site performance and usage. These cookies do not collect information that identifies a visitor. Session cookies set by this site only track your navigation within this site and do not track any further movements once you have navigated away from the site domain. This site may additionally use Functionality Cookies. These cookies allow the website to remember choices you make (such as your user name, language or the region you are in) and provide enhanced, more personal features, such as submitting a product review, submitting a public comment or how you have voted in a contest. This site uses social sharing links to allow you to elect to share our site content within your social network(s). Once content is shared outside of this site, the site to which you post this site's content may have their own cookies.

This site uses the video services of YouTube™. While this site does not set cookies related to the viewing of YouTube™ videos, the YouTube™ service may use cookies for various purposes. Learn more about YouTube's cookies policy here.

By using this website, you agree that we can place these types of cookies on your device.
